Thomas Stevens' Wheeling Tour Around the World
OVER THE SIBERIAN THROUGH THE SNOW SHEDS, AND ACROSS THE GREAT DESERT —CURIOUS RIDERS TRY TO RIDE THE THING—JUST ONCE
"So you feel confident of making a circle of the world on your bicycle, do you, Mr. Stevens?"
"Yes, indeed I do. I have already wheeled from San Francisco to Boston, and I know of nothing that will keep me from carrying out my undertaking."
As almost every one has heard, Thomas Stevens started from San Francisco, Cal., last spring, with the avowed intention of bicycling around the world. He met with little encouragement, many looked upon it as nothing more than the freak of a crazy man. Now that the plucky wheelmen has accomplished this much of his journey, the doubters will begin to think that the capabilities of the bicycle are greater than they ever thought.
Mr. Stevens reached Boston at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon, and was shortly afterwards called upon by a representative of the Globe. He is of medium height and well built, and has a very pleasing manner. He is naturally the fairest of blondes, but so thoroughly have the sun and wind done their work that were it not for his light moustache his face would be taken for anything rather than a white man's. He is an Englishman by birth, and is about 29 years of age. His attire consisted of blue flannel shirt, brown knickerbockers, blue stockings, canvas shoes and a once white military helmet hat. A knife book was strapped to the head of his machine. His clothing showed unmistakable signs of hard usage. His knickerbockers have been replaced four times. The machine he has used is a fifty inch Star Columbia bicycle. He has seldom had occasion to repair it and thinks it may CARRY HIM THRO. IT THE WHOLE TRIP.
Mr. Stevens talked freely but in a frank manly way seeming to be aware that what he had accomplished was at least worthy of mention in making the journey which I undertook partly for pleasure and partly for profit reasons. I have no schedule time with which the different places, and time at each I adhere to. But while in the wheel I am nothing of stopping for sleep. I will without fatigue.
I started from San Francisco April 22. The weather was warm and pleasant. I followed the Central California till the end of the Sierra Nevada mountains. When I reached the Sierras the south was exceedingly cold and there was a foot of snow on the level. But I succeeded in getting through with it. I travelled pretty much as I would have done had there been no snow. I followed the Union Pacific railroad as closely as possible so as to avail myself of the hospitality of the section houses which line the track. In the desert sections where there is no water I used to obtain either food or water by crossing the 40 miles or so which I had to go without. I would take on board the engine with me a load of water and a load of provisions, and by this means I was enabled to get through the desert.
Riding through Utah I started in company with a party of the great Mormon chief and their followers who were going to Ogden. From there I went to Chicago, where I arrived July 1. I stopped there eight days during which time I visited Cincinnati. The worst part of my ride was between Chicago and Cincinnati, as I had to ride through the mud. I reached here in three weeks time.
How did you manage to get your machine across the rivers?" asked the reporter. "I presume you found but few bridges."
There were very few bridges, Mr. Stevens replied. "But I usually had a boat and canoe by me in which to cross. Sometimes however the water was so low that I would have to wade across with my machine on my shoulders. I had many amusing experiences in crossing streams. Sometimes I would meet with natives who had never seen a bicycle before. They would look at me and my machine in astonishment, and I would have to explain to them how it was done. Sometimes I would have to ride through a crowd of natives who had never seen a white man before. They would look at me and my machine in astonishment, and I would have to explain to them how it was done. Sometimes I would have to ride through a crowd of natives who had never seen a white man before.

RECEPTION TO MR. BLAINE

BY THE BUSINESS MEN OF PORTLAND.

Hall Densely Crowded.

PORTLAND August 6 The reception to Mr Blaine by the business men at the City Hall to-night was a brilliant one The hall was packed, the seats being taken and the audience standing, while the galleries were filled with ladies Mr Blaine held a reception in the Mayor's office at 8 o'clock he was conducted to the platform, leaning on the arm of Congressman Reed, being received with great cheering Mr Reed spoke as follows

SUPERVISOR THOMAS B REED Fellow Citizens Before I proceed to the pleasant duty which is assigned to me I feel that you must permit a single word to myself In this country where we all proclaim the position of any man in the history of history depends not only upon the favor of the people but on their favor of him Hence it is that the road to the highest office in the gift of the two great parties which contend every four years for the mastery is not left whether ratified by votes or not in distinction When therefore, this office has been conferred upon a citizen of State it is fit and proper that his fellow citizens of both parties without regard to party should testify to him not public gratitude or political support but their personal good will their kind esteem and regard In this it is expected by seemly that the city of Portland should be seen and that for the city of Portland witnessed by a meeting of that vigorous and brilliant character which the approving vote of people may heighten and prolong which even the adverse vote of the district most impatient as it cannot fail to finally stern resolutely into future years and into the very life of the history of the United States of America for fifty years youthful vigor

Mr Blaine If fewer my task to introduce to you a friend I could be put in a position more unpleasant to them that the task set of their kind known them better than I do myself But in presenting them to you as friends I must be allowed to say what indeed you already know that while in this rich country there are many groups of upright gentlemen with representatives extending over much wider areas of territory, there is no body of men who have higher standard of intellectual integrity and uprightness or who ought to be better than the gentlemen you see before you You know them so well, and they you, that the expression of their regard and esteem must seem to you, who have received so many honors to attribute of which you may well be proud to present to you, these the business men of Portland, whose spokesman Hon Geo W Woodman, will on their behalf address you

Mr Woodman then read the address of the committee to Mr Blaine

The Address

TO JAMES G BLAINE

The business men of Portland, remembering your former sojourn in their city, and since you have always manifested an interest in and prosperity, as well as pride of the State with which their history is inseparably connected, and in which they take pride in your success so in every citizen of Maine, desire to express their great gratification in your distinguished character and services rendered to you by your nomination as President of the political organization of which you have so long been an honored and honorable member Many of us have enjoyed the privilege of personal acquaintance with you, and all of us shall been able to agree with in your political associations, we have confidence in your integrity and ability as a statesman We remember in the connection how the United States ratify the action of political associations you will as the country by administration an liberal wise and practical basis for the promotion of all our material interests and for its painstaking care for purification and perfection of all the institutions of the public service

It is a matter of which you and your friends may well be proud, that your nomination was a tribute to yourself and was made upon grounds of loyalty to secure the influence of your State at the head of a comparatively insignificant party in the electoral college yet as citizens of Maine we are nevertheless, proud of the honor which has accrued to our State through the popular recognition of your worth and your capacity for public station as we believe that every citizen of Maine, without regard to party honors and respects you therefor

We do not forget that through all the years that you have enjoyed a National influence recorded to but few, you have never been other than one of the people, and have always been mindful of the rights of the humblest individual in the land Though your success in the coming election may widen your opportunities for useful service it will add nothing to the unlimited confidence and esteem sustained for you by us in common with the great mass of your fellow citizens of Maine

The address is signed by some three hundred and seventy-five of the prominent business men of Portland irrespective of party

Response of Mr Blaine

FELLOW CITIZENS

I do not know how to express my sense of the great honor you pay me in this most cordial reception All the more grateful because not tendered in a partisan spirit or for partisan advantages. For the business men of Portland I have, from personal knowledge a profound respect. In community has a higher standard of mercantile honor been maintained, a more stainless commercial credit upheld than in your beautiful city, and the prosperity you enjoy is the legitimate fruit of the comprehensive intelligence of honorable industry, of courageous enterprise Though never a citizen of Portland, I was resident among you for nearly three years, beginning in 1857 and ending in 1859. During that time I was editor of the Daily Advertiser, and was in constant intercourse with the business and professional men of your city I recall a no more pleasant period, and, in a wide sense, a no more profitable period in my life. A quarter of a century has since elapsed, marked with events of world-wide importance, but the light of years has not dimmed my impression of the friendships I then formed, nor of the great kindness I then received in Portland, were it to recite the names of eminent men of both parties, who had more than I was then permitted to number among my friends, this would fill an hour this large assemblage, called for friendly greeting of the living, would be turned to an eulogy on the acting generation None higher could be given than that they are worthy to succeed the Fessendens, the Shepleys, the Browns, the Littles, and that great host of able and upright men whose names and whose careers are true glory of Portland

Introductions to Mr Blaine followed, many gentleman being introduced

MORNING STAR.

Launch of the Missionary Steamer

BATH, Aug 6 The missionary steamer Morning Star was launched at noon by the New England Ship Building Company Her dimensions are length 141 breadth, 30 9 depth, 12 2 gross tonnage 471 05 She will be towed to the Goss Marine Iron Works to receive her machinery Excursions were made from various points and the launch was viewed by 3,000 people Appropriate services took place at the yard, conducted by Rev O W Folsom, of the Winter street Congregational Church, and consisted of prayer by Rev Dr Robbins, of Iowa, prayer by Rev Alpheus Harvey of Boston singing by Green lands Ice Mountains and The Morning Light is Breaking, benediction by Rev I O Flake

The Star is built of the best material and in the strongest manner Ship has three masts and is a barkentine rigged She is of iron, and will be used for a smoke-stack She has a head wind boss with a compound engine of 150-horse power, intended for use only in emergency and in making landings etc She will steam seven knots an hour, and will accommodate seventy-five persons The figure head is a female figure expressing a missionary holding an open Bible in the left hand and pointing to same with the index finger of the right. On the stern is a large silver star, with golden rays above, which is the 'morning star, and below, Boston Mass The steamer is owned by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and is expected to be ready for sea September 10th and sail from Boston with a cargo for Honolulu

The cost is rising $40,000, much of this amount coming from Sunday school contributions, twenty five cents entitling each child to a certificate of stock Capt Isaiah Bray six years in the employ of the Board, will command her The work of the Missionary Board is among the South Sea Islands The steamer's yearly voyage will average thirteen thousand miles It is estimated she will do one-third more work than a sailing vessel The headquarters of the Board are at Honolulu Supplies are brought from San Francisco Capt Bray says that the vessel with auxiliary steam power is absolutely necessary in the route traversed owing to frequent calms, currents and difficulty in landing at the Islands

There are one thousand Islands called the Marshall Gilbert and Caroline groups Two-thirds of these have already been reached by vessels and the remainded will probably be reached on the work of this steamer is done The population of the islands is 125,000 Arthur Logan, son of Rev S W Logan, of Ohio will sail in the steamer for Honolulu

THE STATE MUSTER.

Second Day

AUGUSTA Aug 6 The second day of the muster passed very smoothly The tents withstood the rain Tuesday evening admirably and all was dry and secure within To-day has been pleasant, but rather warm and muggy for the comfort of the troops At 7 30 target shooting in company commands commenced Co C of Biddeford won the prize of a framed picture in the First Regiment, by a score of 87 points At 2 30 P M, the hour for battalion drill the largest crowd ever seen on the grounds was gathered The ladies mostly occupied the reception pavilion The marshal evidently made a great improvement in drilling over Tuesday, their movements were more regular and they maintained a more even line U S officer Fessenden took notes during the drill In the evening there was a Regimental Band Concert Friday will be Governor's day Mr Blaine Governor Fred k Roble and staff, State officers distinguished military visitors and a Massachusetts Company will be present The Governor will make his annual review of the troops.

The Carpet Beetle

WE FURNISH THE HOUSEWIVES, TAILORS AND TANNERS IN DANGER.

Worcester Gazette.

Long but single experience with the carpet bug, or Buffalo moth, we have been generally asked to call it, which, where it comes from and how long it keeps at its work of destruction. The name which Linnæus gave it is the carpet beetle—a kind of coleopterous insect imported from Europe, some writers say in Indian rugs. Some people come here, it is said, rejoicing in its presence very rapidly, in hope it has become known for more than a year. It is described by Linnæus as dermestes scrophularia, from the plants on which it frequents. The beetle is often known to us in discussions of its habits, dining upon pollock. It exists in four forms—the egg, the larva, then pupa and the perfect beetle.

In the form of the latter it is a very active insect, which if it penetrates a house, will find its way to the light, and will be found on the outside of the window. As soon as it has left the egg it begins its work, most of which is done while the larva remains, and follows the points of the wool. They eat their skins when they change to pupæ, and then cast off their pupæ skins when they become beetles. They will feed on cotton which will, of their goods. Naphtha has been suggested. This will kill if it comes in contact with eggs, larvæ or beetles, but as a preventive of depredations it is worthless. A mixture of allspice, camphor and tobacco has been suggested, but this will not prevent the eggs being laid, though it may drive away the insects. Benzine will kill, but they will not go on account of it. The only thing known from our own observation is to keep out the sun, and how to understand what a person says from the motion of the lips. In answer to the reporter's request for an explanation of the method he used, Mr. Whipple picked up a chart of part of the human head, showing the tongue, teeth, lips and palate. These parts were lettered respectively a for the tongue, b for the upper and c for the lower teeth, d and e for the upper and lower lips, and f for the palate.

"The general shapes of these organs used as signs are the principal things we use in teaching," he said as he pointed to the chart. "The vowel sounds are all represented by a front view of the lips. For instance, the sound of e in eel or meet is represented by a straight line for the upper lip and a slightly curved line, following the straight line at both ends, for the lower. If you look at your own lips in a glass and pronounce any word that has a long e sound you will see that they assume this position. In pronouncing a long o, the lips are nearly circular, and we represent that vowel by a simple circle. In words like oil, the size of the circle formed by the lips gradually decreases, and we represent that by two concentric rings. All of the vowel sounds are represented by some modification of these signs.

"With the consonants we are obliged to use the profile view of the sound-producing parts. For these two half ellipses are used, and the circular parts formed by the teeth and other organs are represented by the teeth are shown in two parallel rows, with the spaces turned toward each other, the tongue is pointed if it is to be the apex turned to the left. All the consonant sounds are made by some position of these parts of the mouth and by impulse. With these signs we show how talking alone in a way that can be grasped by the eye."

A peculiar feature of the system is the fact that none of our pupils can pronounce the letters of the alphabet as they stand in a row. We do not teach the pupils to say a, b, c, d, but we teach them the sounds. Each pupil begins to learn to read from the signs representing the vocal organs. For instance, the signs which represent the tongue firmly pressed between the teeth with a sharp aspiration at the same time mean the sound of th, and when it is followed by a complete sign, meaning that the lips are gradually closed, as in the letter b in some of the sounds, the combination means that the word the is intended.

"In this way combinations of these signs are used to represent all words in the English language, and the pupils learn to read and write them with surprising rapidity.

"After they are familiar with these signs on paper, they soon begin to pick out what a person says from the movement of the lips and it is time to take these same motions with their own and finally to talk, not so well as you or I, but so that they can be readily understood.

"After pupils have once learned to read the signs, it is easy for them to associate certain combinations of the sounds with certain combinations of the letters of the alphabet, and in this way they learn to read print without any trouble.

"In addition to the vocal mount of practice to be had at school, they should persons to read and talk, but it can be learned chiefly at home. The hardest part of the whole thing to get a person an idea that there is anything to learn. They see, however, the importance of our lips, and in their eagerness to learn they rapidly grasp the fact that with the knowledge of those lips to be must be something to something we call sounds, of which they have no idea but by which we get changed ideas. After they have learned these signs very soon get them in making sounds that are taken in hand and modified into shape, and after months of study the whole secret of the system is mastered.

After making this explanation, Mr. Whipple called several pupils into the room, and the reporter was soon convinced that the whole system was not quite so difficult as it seemed at first sight. The more advanced ones with whom he conversed could carry on a conversation with a stranger almost as readily as one who could hear and speak, and the little ones could read from the lips of the teacher sentences which they had never seen before. The whole system is a most wonderful one, and reflects great credit upon its originator, Alexander Melville Bell, of Washington, D. C., who is a brother of Prof. A. Graham Bell, of the New York Museum of Natural History, and of Prof. Alexander Bell Melville Bell, deceased, and who identified by Mr. Bell, an eminent elocutionist of Washington, as the truest description of the system.

Lip-Reading

TO NOT HEARD AT PRESENT—HOW DEAF MUTES ARE TAUGHT TO SPEAK.

The inhabitants town of Mystic, in eastern Connecticut, has a school where the children are taught to speak and the deaf mute to hear, from the motion of the mouth and organs. The system used in teaching is an empirical combination of absolute signs, formed from the position of the lips, teeth, tongue and palate, and they are employed in speaking, and that when written on paper or a blackboard, look like Chinese characters which have been badly shaken up by an explosion of dynamite. The institution, called the Whipple Home and his son Frank.

When a reporter visited the institution, J. Whipple was engaged in teaching a y about nine years old, who has been f and dumb since his birth, how to talk
